creation. Be it a new vaccine for Covid-19 or the creation of spacecraft; we as Muslim Ummah and Pakistanis are far behind in this sector. We have put the entire responsibility of creative thinking, new inventions, exploring new frontiers, designing new surgical equipment and techniques on the West, and have only become a consumer society. The universities whose job is to "generate and create new knowledge" are only the tool of knowledge dissemination and not creation. Is Islam a progressive religion or a regressive religion and what is our responsibility as a Muslim scientist, a contemporary physician, as well as, a nation in this competing world," asked Prof Saeed Akhter, Professor and Chairman of Urology and Transplant Surgery, PAF Hospital, Islamabad.

He was invited by the Ziauddin University as a guest speaker to speak on "Research Ethics and Islam". The session was about the concept of research and its ethics in Islam through Quranic examples: "people of knowledge and without knowledge cannot be equal".

Prof. Saeed Akhter's lecture provided directions for medical research-based on his research experience at Yale, Harvard, and other US universities, and his experience over the last fifteen years in establishing medical hospitals and research programs with social objectives.

Prof. Saeed Akhter discussed problems such as the Separation of Islamic Knowledge and Worldly Knowledge. He explains, while saying "Islamic scholars have no idea about contemporary issues and modern sciences; also there seems to be little communication or collaboration Islamic world. As a result, there are no genuine relevant and commercially viable researches or research products. The vast majority of people with modern understanding are unaware of the complexity of Islam's teachings".

"The solution to this problem is to acquire knowledge of both Quranic teachings and contemporary sciences at the same time. Promote research as an essential subject in medical schools, universities, and hospitals with proper funding, also begin to consider and investigate nature, local plants, illness mapping, and remedies in your area, as well as, alternative medications, using evidence-based research. Collaboration between clinical and basic scientists should be improved," he advised.

He also shared with the audience his personal experiences, such as how he wanted to build a machine and how doctors rejected his ideas, despite the fact that he researched and read hundreds of books to make his idea work. There are many nice individuals in the world who are willing to listen to you and your views. Many pupils will approach you with an open mind; simply listen to them and support them, he said.

In his concluding remarks, any largest investment in Pakistan is, I tell them it's the youngsters I've trained".

In his thank you note, Prof. Dr. Syed Irfan Hyder, Vice-Chancellor of Ziauddin University, appreciated Prof. Saeed Akhter's presence. He also discussed the collected who did research on various categories. He also explained how they need to develop their current research profile. He said we will enlist Prof. Saeed Akhter's assistance for future medical research.
