again expected to need to raise tens of billions of pounds in their next budget, on November 26.

That has made companies wary, and new business minister Peter Kyle acknowledged that "this government does need to reassure business, not through rhetoric but through action, that we will deliver for them."

"I accept that we are not where we wanted to be at the speed at which we wanted to get there," he said at a Social Market Foundation event, adding he would have 'a sense of urgency" in improving the situation for business.

Two people who attended a reformatted Labour business event said it was a big improvement on last year, after an overhaul designed to give businesses more facetime with ministers. They said there were lots of ministers who were in listening mode, even if key details of policy plans remained scarce.

Business representatives at the conference said it would take action at the budget to restore confidence, rather than an engagement event, with one source at a FTSE 100 company saying there was a palpable effort to reconnect with businesses but it would mean nothing if they got the budget wrong.—Reuters 11

Barrick and Newmont CEOs depart in mining leadership shake-up

LONDON: Barrick Mining appointed veteran executive Mark Hill as interim president and CEO on Monday following the sudden resignation of Mark Bristow, who led the Canadian miner for nearly seven years after its merger with Randgold Resources.

On the same day, rival Newmont said CEO Tom Palmer will be replaced in January by insider Natascha Viljoen, who will become the first female CEO of the world's biggest gold mining company. The timing of the statements appeared to be coincidental.

The global mining industry has experienced a period of significant transition as an investor push for stronger growth and returns has driven leadership changes across the sector. Rio Tinto earlier this year appointed a new CEO, and the world's largest mining company BHP is also preparing to replace its chief.

In a note, analysts at Citi said that, while Palmer's departure from Newmont was "well flagged" and unlikely to spark a major stock reaction, the Bristow announcement was "more surprising".

Bristow, who became CEO in 2019 when Barrick acquired Randgold, oversaw the integration of the two companies and steered the miner through a period of significant portfolio reshaping and debt reduction.-
