FUTURE OUTLOOK

Despite the prolonged closure of operations since 2018, the Company remains committed to resuming its business activities. However, the external environment continues to pose significant challenges. The global textile sector is still facing elevated production costs, persistent currency devaluation, and volatility in raw cotton prices. Declining end-product prices, coupled with reduced consumer purchasing power due to worldwide inflation, have further affected market demand. These factors have made it increasingly difficult even for established industry players to sustain operations.

Given the ongoing uncertainty in raw cotton markets, unpredictable input material prices, shortage of working capital, and pending litigation with banking institutions, an immediate restart of operations is not currently feasible.

Nevertheless, the management is actively exploring viable options to revive operations. Efforts are underway to:

- Strengthen financial resources, including negotiations for settlement of banking matters and exploring alternative funding sources;
- Evaluate market conditions to identify suitable timing for restarting production;
- Improve operational efficiency by considering cost-effective technologies and restructuring plans;
- Engage with stakeholders to build a sustainable revival strategy.

Management remains optimistic that once financial constraints and legal matters are resolved, and market conditions show signs of stability, the Company will be in a stronger position to recommence its operations
