Future Economic Outlook (FY 2026-27 and Beyond)

Looking ahead, the economic trajectory of Pakistan appears to be at a critical juncture, with several factors poised to shape its performance. Our outlook is one of cautious optimism, contingent upon sustained policy reforms and a more stable geopolitical environment.

Growth Revival

With macroeconomics stability gaining traction, we anticipate a gradual revival in economic growth. This growth will likely be driven by increase private sector investment, particularly if interest rates soften and business confidence improves. The agricultural sector is expected to continue its positive contribution, while the industrial and services sectors will benefit from improved energy supply on lower prices and more conductive policy environment.

Social and Human Development

Beyond economic indicators, there is a growing recognition of the need for inclusive growth that addresses social development challenges. Investment in education, healthcare and skill development will be critical for building a productive workforce and ensuring long term sustainable development. seed.
